

! "#$%&' )%"+&, +"-+ is a one-woman play, written and performed by Rutgers mathematics graduate student Corrine Yap. It juxtaposes the stories of two women trying to find their place in a white male-dominated academic world. The first is of historical Russian mathematician Sofia Kovalevskaya, who was lauded as a pioneer for women in science but only after years of struggle for recognition. Her life's journey is told through music and movement, in both Russian and English. The second is of a the present. As she teaches an introductory real analysis class, she uses mathematical concepts to draw parallels to the race and